	9.	The former Realschule buildings situated in the Berlinerstrasse, Cottbur, were being used as a military hospital as was another so was another 50X1-HUM building in the same street. There were 2,000 patients, the majority of whom were suffering from venereal diseases. The hospital embraced surgical, medical, dermatological, ear, nose, and throat departments, and was staffed by Russian doctors. The latter often called in German practitioners for consultation. Medicines were in poor supply, but the standard of bandaring material was exceptionally high. The cleanliness of the hospital left much to be desired and disinfection was very haphazard. The food provided for the patients was of very poor quality and complaints from the patients on this score were frequent.
